Glycerin

- Can be found in foods, cosmetics, and personal lubricants
- Usually used for its preservation qualities
- Gynecologists warn women who are usually very susceptible to yeast infections to avoid using lubricants containing glycerin
 - Glycerin is processed like sugar and applying it directly to the vagina may increase the chance of yeast infections
 - Women who do not frequently get yeast infections may be fine using glycerin products/lubricants
- Some people are more sensitive to glycerin's effects than others

Polyurethane Condoms:

- Non-latex condom, usually a good alternative for those who are prone to latex allergies
- Less elastic than latex, so more likely to slip or break.
- Conducts heat better than latex, no latex odor, can be used with oil-based lubricants

Polyisoprene Condoms:

- Alternative to natural latex
- Synthetic version of latex and has many similar properties but does not contain the allergenic proteins found in latex.
- Compared to polyurethane, it is softer and stretchier
